Program Background

Managing turnkey engineering projects and delivering the desired project is a complex task involving and bringing together high order of engineering skills with intricate stages of supply chain and capital management.

The clients expect absolute adherence to quality standards and schedules, irrespective of any backend constraints. The journey from idea to turnkey production success though arduous has gained from advancements in capabilities and processes over the years. Today, in India EPC has transformed itself into number of variants.

The interactive seminar would primarily focus on the challenges being faced by the stakeholders of EPC in an environment of disruptive, volatile, uncertain, complex, ambiguous, diverse conditions causing unsustainable levels of stress.

Challenges Faced by India's EPC Sector

EPC Contracts which now a days are being increasingly adopted by various organisations as a major vehicle for execution of Construction & Infrastructure Projects, face major challenges with respect to following issues.

- Constant fluctuating prices of materials and shortage of skilled manpower.
- Shortage of machinery and materials.
- Most of the infrastructure projects get delayed. Alleviating time is a big concern.
- Constant increase in project sizes, scale and market maturity leading to cost overruns.
- Excessive tendering crippled with limited scope.
- Dearth of geological supply of raw material and new technologies in the auction bid.
- High procurement cycle time.
- Increase in production, transportation and investment costs.
- Vendor Identification and Screening.
- High Cost of dispute resolution.
